Clinical Consulting for the Group Practice

The crown and bridge technique that is taught in dental schools works fine... for the gifted students. But it requires an artistic insight and three-dimensional abstract ability that most students simply don't possess.

Group practices are hiring dentists at a record pace. Many of these young doctors struggle due to low clinical confidence... diagnosing and gaining acceptance for cases that they are not sure they can complete successfully.

Practicing inside Glidewell Labs for the last 12 years has given Dr. Michael DiTolla access to tens of thousands of preps and impressions - many of which might be from doctors in your group. He has become intimately familiar with the most common mistakes that dentists make with their crown and bridge preps and impressions, which lead to costly remakes and adjustments. Having to re-anesthetize a patient to take a new impression for a crown that doesn't fit not only erodes patient confidence, but all of the profit for that procedure as well.

Most practices neglect to track their remake rate. Practice owners and dentists typically do not realize the cost of remakes to their practice. It IS possible to prep better and take cleaner impressions that lead to restorations that drop into place with minimal, if any, adjustments.

Dr. DiTolla can show any dentist how to accomplish this – even average to below average dentists. He has developed techniques to achieve above average results utilizing his terminally average hands and these techniques.

Lectures are good, and over the shoulder training works even better. But the most effective method of clinical training is to work with dentists in their own office. This approach allows the dentist to work comfortably with their usual surroundings and team members, and learn while working on full-fee patients. While traveling to an institute can cost tens of thousands of dollars, this approach is more cost efficient and effective!

When a dentist can predictably and efficiently deliver esthetic restorations with minimal remakes, practice profitability skyrockets along with the reputation of the practice.
